Search the term "bottle+rape+scene+dennis+hopper" and you'll likely be sent to this entire film, my former friend Steve's second feature directorial effort (at 42, he's 70 now) and Hopper's purportedly favorite role. Bottle rape at 42:00. There's a creepy, dreamy, nasty edge in almost all the sex scenes of Steve's movies, something I think he picked up from David Lynch* in imitation of the form—but not the substance—of Lynch's genius sex-weirdness... If we were still talking I would probably bring it up, but as he seems to have his mind on other things these days, it'd be pretty pointless.

Renée Marie Why did you post this? What sick twisted possible motive would make you not only post this, but point out the sickest most depraved part? Sick fuck much?

sort of violence not only condone it but enjoy it. And toisting it on others just ups the joy factor for these sick type of predators. They hide behind ' artistic license '. Sickening.

Cantara Christopher Paris Trout was based on a well-regarded book originally on Showtime and eventually released to theaters, to favorable reviews. Dennis Hopper said it was his favorite role. This movie has a place in the general dialogue regarding movies.

Amy Oztan Cantara Christopher Yeah, but you didn't focus on the movie, you focused on the rape scene. You didn't send people to the movie by telling people the movie's title, you directed people to Google the rape scene and pointed out exactly where in the movie... See More

Cantara Christopher Steve's handling of this particular scene-- Elwit's camera angles, the blocking of his actors, etc--is interesting to me, because we're in the same business. This scene is brutal, but is it more brutal--does it deserve your outraged attention--more than Trout's earlier point-blank shooting of a 12 year-old girl?

 Amy Oztan Cantara Christopher We're not outraged at the scene, and you know that. We're outraged at your focus on the scene in a group where it's not appropriate or wanted. But again, you know that. So I'm done.

Christopher Lee I remember seeing this when it was released and liking it then, not that i remember much of it now, but it is kind of strange you point out a rape scene and nothing else about the film

 Cantara Christopher This is part of a general theme I'm exploring on my blog, Steve's propensity for depicting bizarre, almost unreal sexual scenes in his films. Like Barbara Hershey making love in the nude on a bed of broken glass (A Dangerous Woman) or the abortion in t... See More
